Research Interests

My research examines the impact of technological innovation on individuals, organizations, and society. I integrate theories and methods from Economics, Management, and Computer Science to generate insights for both business leaders and policymakers. My current research focuses on

- AI Applications and Regulations: How can AI and human decision makers collaborate effectively in high-stakes, information-rich environments? When and how should we regulate AI deployment to balance the tradeoff between efficiency and equity?
- Market Intelligence: How do technological advances reshape strategic interactions in both traditional and digital marketplaces? How should allocation, pricing, and information policies be adapted in response to evolving participant behaviors?
- Platform Economy: How do platform features shape user behavior? Do platforms democratize access or exacerbate existing disparities?
- Sustainability: How can we design sociotechnical systems that balance environmental sustainability, economic efficiency, and social welfare?
